LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Must be Punished.

After a score—more or less—of murders committed in Bodie during the past two years, for which not one of the murderers received his deserts—excepting a poor devil of a Chinaman—DaRoche, the murderer of Treloar, was hanged by Judge Lynch in that town at an early hour on Monday morning over the spot where the murder was committed. It is to be regretted that the criminal history of this county caused the people of Bodie to administer justice themselves to the murderer, instead of allowing the law to take its course and turn the murderer loose, but it must be admitted that the members of the "Bodie 601" had the moral support of the community, and it is to be hoped the lesson taught on the streets of Bodie on Sunday and Monday morning last, will be a salutary one to the rougher element of that town. No county in the State can boast of more honorable judges and efficient sheriffs than Mono, and if the members of the legal profession, of which we have many of the ablest, will but see that their clients have a speedy, fair and impartial trial, and not do their utmost to delay such important trials until witnesses spirit themselves away, there will be no necessity for Judge Lynch to open his Court—but murderers must be punished.

SURPRISE PARTY.—Last evening some twenty couples from our town, and a number of friends from Bodie, "surprised" Sidney Hutton and family at their ranch near town. They went well provided with good music and candies, and greatly enjoyed the hospitality of the Huttons, dancing being kept up until 2 o'clock this morning, when the pleasure seekers returned home highly satisfied with their "surprise."

THE ELEPHANT.—Brother Osborne, of the Free Press, dropped down from Bodie on Wednesday to take a look at the elephant he will soon have to take care of—the delinquent tax. It is a huge affair and will cost more to look after the animal than the county allows for that purpose; but this is the result of Bodie newspaper competition.

PERSONAL.—On Monday we had the pleasure of a call from S. F. Hoole and Judge Heumett, of Bodie, and on Thursday M. Z. Osborne, of the Bodie Free Press, dropped in on us. To us these calls were very pleasant, as we are always glad to meet our Bodie friends.

GOING DOWN.—Judge Briggs and County Clerk Adams left today for the other side of the mountains. Judge Briggs goes to visit his family at Jackson, and will return in about two weeks. Father goes to San Francisco, to be absent two weeks.

SAM CHENG.—The second trial of Sam Cheng for murder was on Tuesday commenced at the April Term on account of the "absence of material witnesses." The old story.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Monday last, at Bodie, the little son of Mr. Buchanan was pushed by a dog into a tub of scalding water, from the effects of which he died in a short time.

ANTELOPE.—D. M. Barnett, of Barnett's Hotel, Antelope Valley, visited us on Friday. The ponds between here and Antelope are good and the Antelopes are happy in the anticipation of good crops this year.

ADMITTED.—Charles R. Barry, of Bodie, has been admitted to practice before the Supreme Courts of California and Nevada.

COURT.—Superior Court No. 1, Hon. R. M. Briggs, Judge, presiding, met on Monday, when the murder trials were put off till the April Term.

REMOVED.—Judge John A. McQuaid has removed his law office from Bodie, and will hereafter reside in Bridgeport.

BODIE "601."

DaRoche, the murderer of Treloar, was captured, on Saturday night, eight miles from Bodie, on the Goat Ranch road, and hanged by the "601" on Monday morning. We clip the following account of the lynching from the Free Press:

"Judge Lynch held his first court session in Bodie early on Monday morning and passed judgment on a criminal whose crime is already recorded and impressed upon every mind in this community. The tragic end of Joseph DaRoche, the murderer, was at once awful and impressive. The lesson to be learned from it is easily read and the simplest mind can fully comprehend it. That a cruel murder had been committed no one can deny; that the swift retribution was expected every observing citizen could predict with safety. The excitement of the Sabbath did not die away and the wrath of the people did not go out with the setting of the sun. As the shades of darkness enveloped the town, the spirit of revenge increased in intensity and developed into a blazing column of fire. It was burning in its intensity and fearful in its results. After the adjournment of the Court and DaRoche was taken back to his narrow cell, a mysterious committee was organized, the like of which has existed in many towns on this Coast since '46 and whose work has been quick and thorough. This Committee, it is reported, held a long session, and discussed the matter in hand, and its conclusions resulted in the lynching of DaRoche. Between 1:30 and 2 o'clock Monday morning a long line of masked and unmasked men were seen to file out of a side street into Bonanza avenue. There must have been two hundred of them and as the march progressed to the jail the column increased. In front were the shotguns carried by determined men. They were backed up by a company which evidently meant business, and no ordinary force could foil them in their progress. When the jail was reached it was surrounded. Under instructions the door of the cell in which the condemned prisoner lay was being opened. The poor wretch knew what this untimely visit meant, and prepared for the trying ordeal and humiliating death. It was some moments before he was brought out, and the crowd began to grow impatient. Some imagined the prisoner had been taken away by the officers. If this had been the case what would have followed can only be imagined. All these doubts were put at rest by the presence of the man. He wore light-colored pants, a colored calico shirt, and over his shoulders was hung a canvas coat buttoned around the neck. His head was bare, and as the bright rays of the moon glanced upon his face there was a picture of horror visible. It was a look of dogged and defiant submission. With a firm step he descended the steps and came out on the street in a hurried manner, closely guarded by shotguns and revolvers. The order to fall in was given, and all persons not members of the mysterious committee to stand back. The march up Bonanza street was rapid. Not a word was said by the condemned man, and his gaze was fixed upon the ground. He was hurried up back street to Fuller. The corner of Green was turned, and when Webster's blacksmith shop was reached a halt was made. In front of this place was a huge gallows frame, used for raising up wagons, etc., which being repaired. Now it was to be used for quite a different purpose. 'Move it to the spot where the murder was committed,' was the order, and immediately it was picked up by a dozen men and was carried to the corner of Main and Lowe streets. The condemned man glanced at it for a moment and an apparent shudder came over him, but he uttered not a word. From an eye witness we learn that the scene which followed was awful in its impressiveness. The snow had just begun to fall, and the moon, which had shone so brightly during the early part of the night, shed but a pale light on the assembled company. When the corner was reached the heavy gallows was placed upon the ground, and the prisoner led under it. The prisoner's demeanor still remained passive, and his hands, encased in irons, were clasped. His eyes occasionally were turned upward and his lips were seen to move once or twice. On each end of the frame were winlasses and large ropes attached. The rope placed around the prisoner's neck was a small one, when the knot was made it rested against the left ear. This did not suit DaRoche particularly, and he changed it so that it was more in the rear. Some one suggested that his hands and legs should be tied. This was immediately done. The large iron hooks of the frame dangled near the prisoner and the grating sound produced a peculiar feeling. It was at least three minutes before anything was all ready. DaRoche was asked by the leader if he had anything to say. He replied: 'No nothing.' In a moment he was again asked the same question and a French-speaking bystander was requested to receive his answer. The reply this time was: 'I have nothing to say only O God.' 'Fall him,' was the order, and in a twinkling the body arose three feet from the ground. Previous to putting on the rope the overcoat was removed. As soon as the body was elevated a sudden twitch of the legs was observed, but with that exception, not a muscle moved while the body hung to the crossbeam. His death took place without a particle of pain. The face was placid, and the eyes closed and never were reopened. Strangulation must have been immediate. While the body swung to and fro, like pendulum of a clock, the crowd remained perfectly quiet. After a lapse of two or three minutes a voice, sharp and clear, was heard in the background: 'I will give $100 if twenty men connected with this affair will publish their names in the paper to-morrow morning.' The voice was immediately recognized as that of a leading attorney, and a yell went up from the crowd. 'Give him the rope,' 'Put him out,' and similar sentences drowned out the man and his voice. His retreat was as dignified as the exigencies of the case would admit of.

While the body was still hanging a paper was pinned onto his breast bearing the following inscription: 'All others take warning. Let no one cut him down. Bodie 601.' At the expiration of thirty minutes Dr. Deal was summoned, and he pronounced life extinct. The body was then cut down, placed in a plain box and taken to Ward's undertaking rooms. The mysterious committee had completed its work, and the captain gave out the order 'All members of the Bodie 601 will meet at their rendezvous.' In a moment the scene of death was deserted. To use a familiar expression DaRoche died game. He was as firm as a rock to the last and passed out into the unknown without a shudder.
